I had the wonderful opportunity to visit Miss Hutcheon and her brilliant chargers in Year Six! During my visit the students were listening carefully to their teacher talk about a short narrative, entitled The First General Presidential Debate 1960. The students read through the text on the interactive whiteboard, and then used their knowledge of narrative structure to break down the text, into three sections. They are orientation, complication and resolution. (I apologise for the jargon, but this is the language the students freely use when breaking down a narrative (storyline) text! How exciting!)
